

WHAT PRICE PRINCIPLE – PART TWO

Word continues to come in on the passing down of owner-related costs to the General Contractors.

Paying for Prequalification documents, licensing costs to be on a prequalified list, and our old favourite – non refundable deposits for drawings, continue to try our members.

Now we have an architect wanting $350.00 per page to provide electronic documents for projects.

Canadian Tire has upped its cost from $300 to $500 for the privilege of bidding on their projects.

The OGCA opposes these nickel and dime attempts being promoted by some consultants who convince owners that these methods somehow save them money.

The truth is that it saves them nothing. These costs are being factored back in and are driving contractors to bid other owners who are not so intent on complicating the process through this “nickel and diming”.

If you – the Contractors of Ontario – wish to see these types of policies stop, then only you can do that.
